We publish in this issue the article "Drawing a speech. How is the notion of risk designed in institutional maps?" by Professor Felipe de Alba, Full Professor of the Universidad Autonoma Metropolitana Cuajimalpa, Mexico, member of the Editorial Board of the Journal of City Law and Professor Georges Farina, Professor of Sciences Po, considered the most influential academic institution in social and political sciences in France.

This article "Drawing a speech. How is the notion of risk designed in institutional maps?", Contains a proposal to analyze institutional risk discourses (hydrological). They provide elements of analysis of how the risk is constructed, its definition in the theoretical corpus produced by some institutions, and, specifically, in the case of floods in the municipality of Valle de Chalco, State of Mexico. It seeks the representation, the action of power, in which the formulation of a notion of risk is understood as an exercise of political action, of the representation of power through tools (graphic representations) whose scientificity must be far from public discussion or, in its case, overlap with it.

As in the previously published issues, in the present volume 09, number 03, we publish 20 (twenty) unpublished articles, with 05 articles by foreign teachers: the aforementioned "Drawing a speech.
